The Social Ambition of Mrs. Fred hat, knee-breeches, black silk stockings Grant and Her Sister, Mrs. Potter Palmer.

How One Man Popped the Question-Clara Morris on Acting Learning English.

Clara Belle's letter: Mrs. Col. Fred Grant is ineffably pleased with the honor bestowed upon her husband and the triumph that must accrue to her from a four years' residence in the court of Vienna. The fact of the matter is that the lovely daughter of Mr. Honore is not satisfied with her rank in American society. In Washington her position was only a negative success, for the reason that she was too well-bred to care for or to cultivate the political class, and since her residence in New York her honors have been even less satisfactory. True, she has gone a great deal, as a leader once said in the committee of the Water Color Society and decorative art ball, but I never see the Grants anywhere. They have not been sought out by the Four Hundred, and while they reigned in Long Branch as a sort of national curiosity, in Newport they lived at the hotel with Potter Paimer's family just as any other visiting party might, with an income equal to the rates of the house. Out in Chicago things were vastly different, and whenever the Grants visited the city Mrs. Potter Palmer threw open her lake shore palace and allowed the swells of Rush street, Bellevue place and Prairie svenue to come in an make their obeisance. Any distinguished people who happened to be in town at the time were invited and the result was altogether delightful.

As the world knows, the Honore girls delightful.

As the world knows, the Honore girls were convent bred, and while they have very beautiful manners, neither could be called brilliant, and a great many times they have been considered arragant. But now the administration comes to the rescue, and Mrs. Grant is happier than she has ever been since she became the wife of a president's son. Mrs. Potter Palmer is arranging her household to spend the coming summer, and perhaps remain in Vienna through the entire year as her sister's guest.

Vienna through the entire year as her sister's guest.

It might interest some of the devoted mothers of the country to know something of the really admirable methods employed in the education of Col. Gram's two children. Both have a French nurse, from which they have learned the language, which they peak as well as they do English. It is Mrs. Grant's wish that nothing be taught her little daughter to make her independent, self-reliant or forcible. Her mathematical training is limited to the elements; she must know nothing o' philosophy and never be permitted to hold an argument. Music, literature, history, art and the languages are thought sufficient, and under no circumstances will the sweet and under no circumstances will the sweet little brunette be admitted to a schoolhouse as a resident or regular pupil. She is to be a gentle, dependent, trustful, sweet woman with all that softness and pliability of na-ture that the world has always loved and men have adored.

West Indian Belles.

A San Juan, Porto Rico, correspondent of the Pittsburg Dispatch writes: At first, to the inexperienced traveler, the tropical belle appears very attractive. When her plaster-of-paris complexion is not too thick to be repulsive, and permits the transparent purity of her olive skin to be seen, she is very certain of leaving a very pleasant impression upon the mind of a susceptible man. Her eyes are wondrously effective, and to use them is a matter of education. A tropical girl can throw more meaning into a single glance than her Yankee sister can convey in an hour's her rankee sister can convey in an hours conversation, and her gestures and motions are captivating in their intelligence and grace. She may not be able to write a sentence correctly—for the action of women has not been considered essential to their happiness—and have as vague a conception of where an American comes from as she has of the composition of the stars. She can, however, conceal her intellectual defects and exhibit her attractions with more than an abundance. ceal her intellectual defects and exhibit her attractions with more than an abund-ance of those coquettish graces with which budding womanhood has been endowed in all ages and latitudes. She is amiable, genall ages and latitudes. She is amiable, gentile and generous; she nev r loses her self-possession and is never at a loss for the proper word or movement. She does not know how to be rude and is gifted with rare natural powers of sympathy and diplomacy. Her perceptions are keen and unerring. She does not need a diagram to find the point of a withing and reads one's thoughts. does not need a diagram to find the point of a witticism, and reads one's thoughts with clairvoyant power. But she never reasons; it is not necessary for her to do so. She follows instinct, and the faculty is strongly developed. In your conversation she is always interested, and brightens it with dashes of wit save as well as the state of th it with flashes of wit and sympathetic in-terpolation. You feel that she is enter-tained and are gratified at her attention and appreciation, but when you attempt to search her mind for knowledge the illusion vanishes, and you see only the plaything

Young Alan Arthur.

New York Graphic: Apropos of the gossip anent presidents' sons I saw a letter yesterday that tells a good tale about the remarkable development of manhood that has taken place in Alan Arthur since the death of his father. When his father was president young Arthur was inclined to be president young Arthur was inclined to be a little wild—that is to say, he had not sown all his wild oats. He was never a vicious youth, but he was just a little boisterous and decidedly reckless. Nor had he much of the discretion that marked his father's conduct. He had not left Princeton then, and was in the habit of asking two or three friends down to Washington to spend Sunday at the White House. There were two or three fast horses kept in the executive stables, and Washington ians were inclined to think that they were sometimes handled by a fast crowd. But by and by Arthur fell in love with a very sensible girl who, however, was not creditby and by Arthur fell in love with a very sensible girl who, however, was not credited with much discretion, and she gave him such a vigorous conge that he did not get over it for a long while. The experience seemed to open his eyes to the fact that he was getting to be a man and that it was high time for him to put away childish things. Well, his father left the white house, and Alan left Princeton, while a great deal of nonsense left him. After his father died the young man went abroad, and those who have met him in London, in Paris, and in Italy say that one would scarcely recognize in the well-conducted gentlemanly young man the harum scarum youth that used to keep Washington tongues wagging. It is now stated that Mr. Arthur is soon coming home, and that some friends of his father have already provided for him a snug position under the government. rushes, and he kept a golden caif and worshings. "One or two of our bishops have already ventured to appear in the English dress; but they have been somewhat discouraged by the irreverent American small boy, who shouted "Shoot der hat." and "Git on to der socks," when they appeared in the streets. Some of our right reverend fathers are also said to be anxious to wear a miter when officiating, and to have an episcopal staff carried before them on all ceremonial occasions. Americans used to boast that they were above such things as uniforms, but the day when such a boast was possible is long since gone."

Popping the Question.

New York Mercury: It was seven long years since Jonas Harris had begun to 'keep company" with Miss Hannah Bell and yet in all that time he had not mus tered courage to propose a certain import with her rank in American society. In ant question. His house was lonely and waiting, hers was lonely enough to be vawaiting, hers was ionely enough to be vacated, and still Jonas could not bring himself to speak the decisive words. Many a time he had waiked up to her door with the courage of a hon, only to find himself a very mouse when she appeared.
On making his usual appearance one night the hearth was swept, the fire burned brightly and Miss Hannah was adorned

Conversation went serenely on for an hour or so, and then, when they both sat paring red-cheeked apples with great contentment, Jonas began to call upon his recollections.

"Yes, a good many."

"Yes, a good many."

"I wonder if I shall be settin' here this time another year?"

"Maybe I shan't be at home. Perhaps I shall go out to spend the evening myself," said Miss Hannah, briskly.

"Maybe I could get it myself."

"So you could! so you could!" cried Jonas, his eyes beginning to sparkle. "But there wouldn't be anybody to cook the pies and cakes beforehand."

"Maybe I could cook 'em."

At that moment Jonas' plate fell between his knees to the hearth and broke in two, but ne'ther of them noticed it.

Clara Morris and the Crities. Clara Morris, the actress, said to a re porter not long ago: "Adverse criticism never displeases me when it is intelligent and I may profit from the instruction-What I do cry shame upon is the tendency among certain American critics to find fault with purely physical shortcomings. fault with purely physical shortcomings. What wretched taste, to be sure. Just as if a woman can help the manner in which she is formed. Few actresses have suffered more from such misplaced criticism than myself. My square shoulders and my other physical deficiencies have been dilated upon until I have grown disgusted. But I have tried to ignore this, seeking to invest my roles with thorough naturalness and with such artistic instinct as is mine. As you know, I am a devout believer in real emotion on the stage, and am convinced that the most technically perfect interpretation of passion must be hollow if the setters of setters does not settably fem. the actor or actress does not actually feel the part that is being portrayed. Realism, of course, is essential, but one must be oh! so careful, in not carrying it too far. Charlotte Cushman, for example, was absolute ly false to nature when she snored in the sleep waking scene. One does not snored ly false to nature when she snored in the sleep waking scene. One does not snore in that position. Matilda Heron understood the symptoms of consumption, yet were I to repeat to-day some of the sickening details in her death scene I would behissed off the stage. When I die a violent death by poison on the boards, I realize that were my contortions real I should draw my knees to my chest with a thud that all the house might hear. But that would not do. Ideality is essential, and when realism is carried too far, no matter how accurately, it merely becomes ludicrous or repulsive."

A Lesson in English.

The Lewist n (Me.) Journal relates the following about Mr. Thomas, whom President Harrison recently reappointed minis ter to Sweden:

When Minister Thomas re-entered Portland society with a beautiful Swedish wife there was a general sensation, and the story-tellers, as well as the gossips of a less imaginative turn, found an abundance of material for their employment.

The story goes that at a home breakfast one morning, before Mrs. Thomas had acquired much English, an awkward servant spilled some coffee on the minister's coat.

"That's a d—d pretty piece of werk!" explained the minister.

A lady, 80 For all information and circulars reyears of age, lying at the point of death, sent for her clergyman and availed herself of the spiritual consolation that holy man was qualified to administer. This import-ant office having been discharged, the moribund octogenarian fell to discoursing about the manner in which she wished to have her obsequies conducted, and she in-sisted that she should be so attired as to

"There are two styles, my dear sister, answered the pastor, soothingly. "The coffins for married women are lined with red silk and the coffins for maiden ladies are lined with white satin."

"Well, then," said the old lady, with a sigh, "I suppose you'll have to line my coffin with white satin," and in a moment she added, brightening up, "but you can put in some strips of scarlet plush, for I was pretty gay when I was a girl." "There are two styles, my dear sister,

Man Wants a Tonic When there is a lack of elastic energy in the system, shown by a sense of languor and unrest in the morning, frequent yawning during the day and disturbed sleep at night. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters infuses unwonted energy into the enfeebled and nervous, endowing them with muscular energy, an ability to repose healthfully and digest without inconvenience. Nervous-ness, headache, biliousness, impaired ap-petite, and a feeble, troublesome stomach, are all and speedily set right by this match-less regulator and invigorant. The mineral less regulator and invigorant. The mineral poisons, among them strychnia and nux vomica, are never safe tonics, even in idfinitesimal doses. The Bitters answer the purpose more effectually, and can be relied upon as perfectly safe by the most prudent. Fever and ague, kidney troubles and rheumatism yield to it.

The Clear-Headedness of Youth. While the merits of the various blood purifiers are being shown up to the best advantage possible by their several manufacturers, we would suggest to persons feeling the need of such a medicine, that they try a dose of St. Patrick's Pills, and assure them that they will not only be sur-prised, but delighted with the result. Those who wish to feel the animation, buoyancy and clear-headedness of youth should take St. Patrick's Phils. For sale by H. M. Parchen & Co.
